

10 November 1959

Now that the shouting and tumult has died and the captains and the kings departed, I have had an opportunity to discuss your proposed trip with the boss. He was very much interested and asked that you get in touch with us when your plans are firm. He also wanted you to know that he was sorry you missed the luncheon but understands why you could not make it.

It was good to see you again and I wish you would come down more often. Needless to say, all of us were pleased with the way the ceremony went off and have had nothing but good reports from the President on down.

The news of "Beetle," as of yesterday, is about the same--he is holding his own.

Warm personal regards,

Sincerely,

Executive Officer
